

With the steamer through Venice

Summer holidays at last! Even if this year everything is a little different, there are already tourists in Venice again. And huge cruise ships are still cruising through the lagoon city, even though there will soon be a ban, because the damage to the foundations as well as to the ecologically sensitive lagoon system is too much.

And this brings us to the subject of this somewhat different newsletter from mine: I met the well-known Swiss entrepreneur Rosmarie Michel and spoke with the experienced woman (born in 1931) about our economic system. She said that the time of the giant steamers was over - both in the economy and in Venice's lagoons: "These colossuses are not fit for the future", she says in an interview. But read for yourself!

Click here for the interview.

I wish you good rest, a sunny summer and only the best!

Best regards
Roland Haas